Australia is rapidly moving up the ranks of global LNG producers. In 2009 it passed Algeria and Nigeria to become the world's fourth largest LNG producer and is on its way to becoming the second biggest producer. This is a great opportunity, but also brings challenges. In his presentation, Dr Graeme Bethune, CEO, EnergyQuest, will review the current state of the global LNG market and Australia's place within it; the current state of projects in Western Australia and Queensland; and the challenges to building such mega projects in Australia, including the implications for the domestic gas market.

EnergyQuest (www.energyquest.com.au) is an Australian-based energy advisory firm, which specialises in market analysis and strategy for energy companies and buyers, investors and governments. It also aims to be a source of informed comment on energy trends affecting Australia and the region. With more than 100 years combined experience across the energy sector, capital markets and government and taking an international perspective, EnergyQuest is committed: to independent and rigorous analysis. Dr Graeme Bethune, was previously head of business development, finance and investor relations at Santos. He ranks in the top 5% of the Gerson Lehrman global network of over 30,000 energy experts.
